FOOTBALL
A PATH TO SELF-AWARENESS
becoming master of our emotions

TESTIMONIALS OF
GREAT CHAMPIONS
One day we'll live in a world where all young people will have access to an education that will enable them to develop their emotional well-being and the quality of their relationships. Through their experiences in school and sports they will discover the skills that will increase their self-knowledge, their ability to truly listen and their empathy with others. Knowing oneself is one of the great adventures of the 21st century. Up to now, little attention has been paid to the necessary skills and a context for learning how to master them. It's an excellent space where each situation can become an opportunity to learn more about ourselves and to understand what makes us and others tick. The Education 4 Peace Foundation encourages a diversity of approaches and methods, based on pleasure, sharing and awareness, thus contributing to improved physical and emotional health.

Mark Milton
Founder of Education 4 Peace

Emotions play a huge role in football, the most beautiful diversion in the world. There is an undisputed connection between thinking processes, emotional and physical condition, as well as the behaviour that arises as a result of them on the sports field. Emotions and behaviour are mutually interactive! The joy of a victory or an important goal, or even pride about oneself's own performance are experiences that influence personal development. By contrast, there are often negative feelings such as stress, disappointment or anger in the world of sports. These are all factors that decrease enjoyment of the game. There is no doubt that the technical, tactical, physical and psychological aspects of football have become more advanced. However, the psychosocial skills are often neglected. Generating and controlling the ‘appropriate’ emotion are prerequisites for practising sport successfully. We would like this book to be an innovative pillar of support for our trainees during the implementation of techniques and strategies to encourage personal development, as well as team and communication skills.

Laurent Prince
National Technical Director, Suisse

The world of football is a microcosm of society. Tensions, team work, emotions and reflection, it’s all there. Football is often associated with violence, whereas it is seen by millions of people just as a source of entertainment and well-being that creates solidarity and comradeship. Football also teaches us about life, how to behave with others and how to better ourselves.

The game triggers a wide range of emotions. The line between what is considered as a fault and what isn’t is often tenuous, and in the heat of a match, a referee’s decision can be perceived as unfair. Football provides an ideal setting to explore self-awareness and empathy.

Goldberg. His name was Goldberg. I admired him because he was the goalkeeper for the school football team. He could dive elegantly. This young star used his talent and our admiration for him to star used his talent and our admiration for him to Self-confidence, determination and responsibility, or self-doubt? Showing initiative and learning from challenges, or enduring them passively? Managing difficulties calmly, with patience, autonomy and confidence, or succumbing to panic and exaggerated reactions? Players, coaches, referees, fans and spectators all experience again and again a host of varied emotions during football matches. This fascinating team sport gives us an opportunity to look at ourselves. Successes and failures in football, but also in sport in general, must always be connected to human behaviours. The assessment of the performance of a player, a coach or a referee is always based on his observable behaviour. This book is designed as a toolbox, to help us learn more about ourselves and improve our skills in numerous fields. Let’s score this goal together!

Laurent Prince
National Technical Director, Suisse

We would like to express our gratitude to the three associations members of UEFA for their contribution to this book. We hope this guide will help current and future generations of players, coaches and supporters so that they can give their best to the game in terms of performance and behaviour.

In 2008, the reform of coaches’ training programme initiated by the French Football Federation led us to review our educational principles, from a conceptual and pedagogical point of view. It became clear that the behaviour of players, coaches, and even coach trainers plays a crucial role on how the game is played and on the quality of the teamwork.

The mental, emotional and physical dimensions of self-awareness were clearly seen as a source of progress and a key element to the improvement of performance. In 2014, the French national technical management DTN created a task force dedicated to performance optimisation. Its mission was to propose tools to develop players’ support, and to create the first coaching certificate in this field. We are proud to have collaborated on this initiative with our Swiss and Belgian friends, and we are very happy to see that others are following this route to improve our sport. It is a sign that we all share the same objective, which is to take football further for the future generations.

François Blaquart
National Technical Director, France

In our modern society, sports play an important role. Not only are they activities that a lot of people take part in, but they also provide an effective means of development for young people. Being master our emotions doesn’t mean extinguishing them. On the contrary, it channels them so that we can use their energy to help us play better. Some decades ago, we were told that emotions skewed a scientific approach. Nowadays, science studies emotions. We are thus discovering that not mastering our emotions causes an enormous waste of energy, we tire ourselves unnecessarily, we spoil our relationships with teammates, friends and family: a bad deal! Those who learn to regulate their emotions, concentrate better, tire themselves less and enjoy pleasant relationships with their friends: a good deal!

We all want to be happy and we all want respect, for ourselves and those around us, in life as well as on the pitch

But sometimes it’s easier said than done ...

Learning to be happy

We learn a lot at school, things that help us to progress and get a job.

The same is true of our spare time. We like to learn to do things that help our development and are fun.

But until now, far too little attention has been paid to teaching us how we function and what we can do to feel good about ourselves and others. This is something we have to learn on our own, by trial and error.

Yet knowing how to be happy and how to get on with others is just as important as all the rest.

“When the day comes when societies give even the youngest individuals as much information about who they are – the mechanisms that allow them to think, desire, be happy or sad, calm or anxious; in short, what allows them to live – as they give information on the most effective way to produce goods, … the daily lives of individuals will be transformed.”

Henri Laborit, 1976

French physician, writer and philosopher

Times are changing.

We now have this knowledge, and it’s available to everyone. We now talk about well-being, emotional health and so on.

Young people today have the privilege of being able to acquire such knowledge early in life.

Self-discovery is one of the great adventures of the 21st century.

Adults are making these discoveries too. For them, it’s a case of new things to learn and habits to change.

“The empire of man is internal”
Antoine de St Exupéry
HOW CAN WE DEVELOP OUR EMOTIONAL INTELLIGENCE?

Our emotions tell us what is important to us...

We think that how we feel has some external cause.

But in fact, even if an emotion is triggered by an external event, how we feel comes from something inside us.

This becomes clearer when the same external cause triggers different feelings.

And suddenly, this completely changes our way of thinking and talking about things. It’s one of the keys to changing from a reptilian footballer into a thinking footballer.

2.1. UNDERSTANDING HOW EMOTIONS WORK

...they tell us what we really need

Every living being needs certain things to survive and flourish, and we have to pay attention to these basic needs.

Also in nature, everything that lives has needs. For example, a plant needs:

- light, heat
- food
- water

All plants have these needs, but not to the same extent. Each plant is unique: some need more shade, others more sun; some need a lot of water, others less. A gardener pays attention to each plant’s needs and to the signs they show.

If a plant’s needs have been met, it shows and the plant thrives.

If its needs have not been properly met, this also shows.

Because Sunday’s match has been postponed.

I’m mad!

I’m furious because I really wanted to play. I wanted to have a good time with my mates.

Desire to play

I’m relieved because I hurt my ankle in training, so now I’ll have a bit longer to recover.

Healing

Because I’m furious, I’m not able to think about the match.

I’m mad!
Washing away stresses and strains

to release tension and sleep well

Cleansing your body

If you’ve been playing football, have got all sweaty and go to bed without taking a shower, you don’t feel good and don’t sleep well.

But if you have a good shower, you feel better when you go to bed and you get a better night’s sleep.

If you’re muddy, you lather up and have a good scrub-down. If you’re not too dirty, a rinse-down will do.

Cleansing your emotions

We build up a lot of tension over the course of the day due to the stresses of everyday life. If you go to bed like that, you’ll probably not sleep as well as you could.

A relaxation session before going to bed helps us to release tension and helps you sleep better.

If you’re very tense, whether physically or mentally (you might be anxious or stressed the night before a big game, for example, or over-excited), try the tensing and relaxing exercise. (See page 68)

If you’re just a little bit tense, gentle movements will probably be enough. (See page 69)

Have you noticed that if you haven’t slept well, you’re more irritable and you don’t play so well?

Knowing how to sleep well whatever’s going on is one of the keys to well-being, self-control and performance.
PARENTS AND COACHES

This part is specifically for you. Please take the time to read through the other parts, which have been written for the youngsters, because they include a lot of information that’s also important for you and won’t be repeated here.

Our teaching objectives

Whether we’re parents or coaches, we want the best for our children or the children in our care. Broadly speaking, we all have the same teaching objectives, namely that the children:

- are happy,
- are self-confident,
- are independent and responsible,
- find their place in life,
- acquire the skills to be successful in life,
- are comfortable in their relationships with others,
- have respect for themselves and others.

Football is one way to meet your teaching objectives.

We want young people to enjoy:
- the ball and the game,
- being with their friends,
- the general atmosphere.

We want this to help them to:
- feel fulfilled,
- express themselves through an activity,
- put their energy to good use,
- discover what they’re capable of,
- develop their skills,
- develop their self-confidence.

We want them to learn life skills:
- the value of effort, perseverance,
- the value of team spirit,
- respect for themselves and their bodies,
- respect for others,
- respect for rules,
- respect for material things and places.

Can you relate to these objectives? We all have values that are especially important to us; that we hope will shape our lives and that we want to pass on. What are yours?

So how should we act on a day-to-day basis in pursuit of these objectives? Let’s have a look at a few ideas!
At the beginning of my career, I was overcome with fears. Only when I dared confront these fears did I learn who I was, develop my self-confidence and become aware of my potential.

My parents’ support was essential. It was always unconditional, trusting and offered without expectations or pressure.

As a trainer now, my objective is to get my players as fit as possible, physically of course but also emotionally. My personal experience has taught me the importance of promoting exchanges with and between players, helping them to know themselves better and to express how they feel.

I am convinced that self-awareness has an impact on performance and that it will elevate tomorrow’s football.

Zinedine Zidane

This book was written to stimulate interest in self-awareness, and to highlight the connection between well-being and performance. It provides practical information on how to manage our emotions and our thoughts, using multiple approaches.

It is aimed at coaches, young players, educators and parents, in football but also in sport in general. It provides tools to help us exercise self-control in difficult situations.
